why?"

The words were scribbled down hurriedly onto the notebook page. I saw tear stains blotching up some of the words. This brought me one step closer to solving this case. I tucked the torn up book into my jacket before I left the scene.

Chapter 2 by Jacinta Byrne

I walked quickly along the wet footpath, my head swarming with different ideas. I counted on my fingers as I muttered what I had discovered.

"Ok, so this person was probably a girl, she underwent some form of depression or mental suffering, and she needed help. However, she didn't get the help she needed soon enough, which caused her to take her own life."

Something was missing - a key clue, like a missing piece to the jigsaw puzzle. I needed more clues, more evidence of what really happened that night.
